

nowadays, more teenagers want to become famous actors or singers. Why do you think this is happening? Is this a positive or negative development?

Essay:

Indeed, it is increasingly apparent that today's teenagers are being lured by the glamour and ostentation of celebrity life. This phenomenon can largely be attributed to the intense exposure of youngsters to media which portrays the glitz and sparkle of stardom, enticing them to dream of similar fame and opulence. However, I firmly hold the opinion that this trend is majorly detrimental for the youth, potentially diverting their focus away from other equally important aspects of life.

The charm and allure of celebrity life typically emanates from incessant media coverage, showcasing their extravagant lifestyles and envious popularity. Often, adolescents are captivated by this, aspiring to attain such an elevated social status and the accompanying luxurious life. This obsession with imitating their favourite stars can result in less emphasis on academic performance, as a recent survey revealing that over fifty percent of students wished to emulate TV personalities' lifestyles indicates.

Although some argue that this trend has its merits, I firmly believe it is more problematic than beneficial. An uncritical pursuit of fame may lead teenagers to overlook the importance of preparing for an alternative career in their twenties should they fail to achieve their dream of stardom. A lack of a fallback career could result in a less fulfilling lifestyle in comparison to their peers who duly pursued formal education. For instance, adolescents who entirely focused on mimicking their idols could face difficulties securing jobs in other fields due to lack of necessary skills acquired through formal education.

In conclusion, despite the overwhelming attraction of celebrities' lives for many young people, the downsides far outweigh the perceived glamour as it can lead to less balanced and fulfilling lives in the long run.
