

In many countries today, both men and women need to work full time. Therefore, some people think men and women should share household task equally (e.g. cleaning and looking after children). To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Essay:

The topic of equal division of domestic duties amongst men and women has been a polemical issue in various societies. As both genders increasingly participate in full-time jobs, it is suggested that household tasks should be evenly shared. Overall, I personally incline towards this perspective.

To start, the notion of equal sharing of household chores is critical since both men and women contribute to their family's livelihood, irrespective of gender. An excellent case in point is South Korea, where many young couples are employed in full-time roles, routinely clocking over eight hours in their offices. Such couples inevitably find themselves sharing household duties on account of their constrained at-home time schedule.

However, I believe that it is crucial not just to promote this behaviour pattern but also to implement government-led programs specifically targeting gender prejudices. By encouraging positive and equal views on gender, the burden of home tasks on women would be lessened considerably. For instance, public awareness campaigns aimed at fostering gender-equitable attitudes most certainly would challenge men to consider their share in domestic duties.

In conclusion, addressing this pressing societal issue of unequal division of home chores is key. Government and societal efforts that focus on altering deeply ingrained gender biases are likely to pave the way towards a more balanced future.

Word count: 261

Essay translated in Korean:

가 .

, 가 .

, .

, 가 가 가 8

. ,

. 가 가 .

. ,

. ,

, 가

Good expressions:

1. Polemical issue - 가
2. Incline towards - ~
3. An excellent case in point -
4. Government-led programs -
5. Deeply ingrained -
6. Pave the way towards - ~