

art should be a compulsory class for high school students. to what extent do you agree or disagree

Essay:

The question of whether art should be a mandatory subject for high school students is often debated. I am of the view that making art classes compulsory is indeed of significant importance, particularly in South Korea.

Art programs provide an array of benefits for students across the academic spectrum. Not just confined to fostering artistic skills, art education can enhance numerous areas including mathematical capabilities, musical talent and more. A study conducted at Harvard University validates this perspective, articulating that learning art improves cognition and aids in the acquisition of other subjects. Moreover, scientific research supports the notion that art can serve as a factor in stress reduction, a crucial boon for students in today's fast-paced, high-pressure educational environment.

The incorporation of art courses is especially vital for high school students, who are at a pivotal stage, honing a diverse range of skills. The knowledge gained from art classes can guide their learning trajectory and life choices. The words of famed Korean politician Kim Min Ho, an art enthusiast himself, echo this sentiment. He credits his innovative ideas to his exposure to art and fervently encourages his son in this pursuit. His is not an isolated case, but rather an illustration of how the skills acquired from art education can have profound applications beyond the sphere of art itself.

In summary, the importance of making art classes mandatory for high school students is paramount. The benefits extend beyond the purview of art, enhancing a multitude of skills essential for myriad career paths. Hence, the call for compulsory art education is not just pertinent, but also compelling.
